

ABOUT LAOS

Bounded by Myanmar and China, Vietnam, Cambodia and Thailand, Laos is a small landlocked country in Southeast Asia. With a population of about 7 million, the rural villages rely predominantly on subsistence farming.

During the 1960's, Laos lost 1/3 of its people during the 'Secret War' and became the most heavily bombed country per capita in the world. Over a 9-year period (1964-1973), a planeload of bombs was dropped every 8 minutes, 24 hours per day. It is estimated 30% of the 260 million bombs dropped (that's 78 MILLION!) never exploded and remain scattered all around the countryside, leaving a dark and deadly legacy.

Serving more than 65 villages (over 35,000 rural villagers), Adopt A Village in Laos continues to provide support with family water filters, permanent water supplies requiring dams, water tanks, taps and pipe, schools, toilets, student support and so much more for its residents, with new projects being announced each year.

- Services a family of up to 8
- Lasts for many years

spigot

Made in Champasak province, Laos, these economical and durable gravity-fed water purification filters are highly effective at removing bacteria, protozoa, parasitic worms, turbidity and other suspended solids, all of which can contribute to major health issues such as liver and kidney failure. Additionally, the pores of the ceramic filter are "infused with anti-bacterial silver to provide a permanent secondary defense." (laowater.com)

Before each rural village family can receive a water filter, one member from each family must take a hygiene course to learn how to maintain it properly.

How to Sponsor a Water Filter Family:

A photo of the receiving family with their filter, includes the label with donor's name (or a name of your choosing), city/town/village and province/state/territory, will be emailed to the donor. The label includes the country flag of the donor as a backdrop with the words, "In Friendship and Respect" in Lao language.
